

Active Utilization of Green Building Materials

Green building materials are generally beneficial to preservation of ecosystems and human health.

In the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, they are making great efforts to develop and utilize finishing materials made of light-burnt magnesia and other building materials that absorb carbon dioxide from the atmosphere and recyclable building materials. They are also intensifying research into inorganic paint.