

A Drive for Increased Production

One day in July of a year, Chairman Kim Jong Il visited the then Pyongyang Textile Mill in spite of midsummer heat.

Noting that the Workers' Party of Korea has set it as its noble duty to steadily promote the wellbeing of the people and made strenuous efforts to this end and subordinated all problems arising in economic construction to enhancing their living standards, he stated that solving the clothing problem occupies an important place in the building of a socialist power.

All the workers of the factory should give full play to the spirit of devoted service for the people in order to supply them with better and more materials for their clothes, he said, stressing the need for them to dedicate their wisdom and zeal for cloth production with a feeling of making cloth for their own.
