

With Loving Care for Schoolchildren

One November day in 2016, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the Samjiyon Schoolchildren's Palace.

When he entered a room, he said that it was so hot and asked if there was no thermostat there.

Officials could not answer him, as the teachers, schoolchildren and their parents were of the same opinion that they liked the hot air in the room in the winter.

But Kim Jong Un showed deep concern for providing schoolchildren with more suitable indoor temperature.

Looking at the officials, he earnestly asked them to establish an integrated control system capable of automatically regulating the temperature of rooms in the palace.

In the fine art room, he stressed the need to build a general control room in the palace and install sensors in all rooms so as to monitor the temperature on a real-time basis and control it automatically and thus ensure normal temperature at 21-22°C even in winter.
